Introduction

This is a summarized report of the birding I did during the time my family and me worked and lived in Beijing. I arrived in early April 2003 with the first heatwave of the year as well as breaking news of SARS and now when we are leaving China after almost six years, I have managed to record most of the birds that have occurred in Greater China. Apart from the two enigmas Vaurie's Nightjar and Sillem's Mountain-Finch and a few south Asian fringing species like e.g. Mrs Hume's Pheasant and Sclater's Monal, there are no species that I have not recorded either inside or outside China. There are also a few interesting subspecies that I have still not seen, e.g. the central Chinese Long-tailed Rosefinch and the halcyon Bar-winged Wren-Babbler. Thus there is still a good reason to come back one day!

China is an extremely fascinating and varied country. From a birding perspective it boasts almost 12 % of the world's number of species. Only about 50 of those are endemics, but in addition to those there is a large number of species that only barely goes into e.g. Mongolia, Russia, North Korea, Myanmar or Viet Nam. Furthermore, the number of very distinct subspecies is very large and no doubt there will be many splits in the future when more taxonomic scientists get to work on them. As an extra thrill there are still new species to science being described in China, the most recent being Sichuan Treecreeper in 2003 and Nonggang Babbler in 2008. There are also areas in China that have been very poorly researched that may hold new species to science, e.g. the northeastern escarpment of the Tibetan Plateau and some of the mountains bordering Tonkin in Viet Nam. Then there are possibly already lost birds like Crested Shelduck, Vaurie's Nightjar, White-eyed River-Martin (?) and Sillem's Mountain-Finch. China is especially rich in some groups of birds like pheasants, laughingthrushes, parrotbills, phylloscopus, tits, rosefinches, buntings, etc.

In my opinion, China is greatly underestimated in terms of birding opportunities. Not only because the vast number of species, but also for the diversity. During my time in China, I had the opportunity to bird habitats ranging from the Roof of the World on the Tibetan Plateau, the Yunnan/Burmese border mountains, the Taklamakan desert and mountains in northwestern Xinjiang, the endemic-rich mountains in Sichuan and Shaanxi, the grasslands in Manchuria, the southeastern highlands and last but not least also the fantastic Siberian migration flyway around Beijing and Beidaihe.

Before 2003, I had only done some very limited birding in coastal China, so the potential for new discoveries was enormous. I had birded many surrounding places like Siberia, Japan, Kazakhstan, Uzbekistan, Kirgistan, India, Thailand and the Philippines, but still not done any justice to the Middle Kingdom. Apart from some more extensive trips, a lot of my birding within China was conducted as weekend trips, some of them extended with an extra day or two. As some Chinese birds are actually much easier to see in bordering countries, I also did a number of "side-trips" to countries like Mongolia, North Korea, Kazakhstan, Uzbekistan, Amurland in Russia, Japan (thrice), Cambodia, Laos, Viet Nam (4 times), Myanmar and India (4 times).

During my birding I was many times joined by numerous other people like other expat birders, Chinese resident birders and visiting friends from Sweden or elsewhere. My first thanks go to all these nice people with whom I share so many great experiences and memories. In alphabetical order: Steve Bale, Chris Champion, Dai Bo, Marco della Seta, Lars Davner, Dong Jiangtian, Nick Dymond, Brian Elder, Jorgen Eriksson, Gan Li Qing, the late Mats Garlin, Mattias Gerdin, Chris Gladwin, Jiang Aiwu, Mans Grundsten, Joakim Hammar, Professor He Fen-qi, John and Jemi Holmes, Jesper Hornskov, Mike Leven, Nick Moran, Li Peng, Mr Li, Mr Lin, Graeme Salt, Dave Sargeant, Johan Stallberg, Stig-Uno Svensson, Graham Talbot, Liu Yang, Liang Wei, Mr Wang, Zhang Gaofeng and Sophie Zheng.

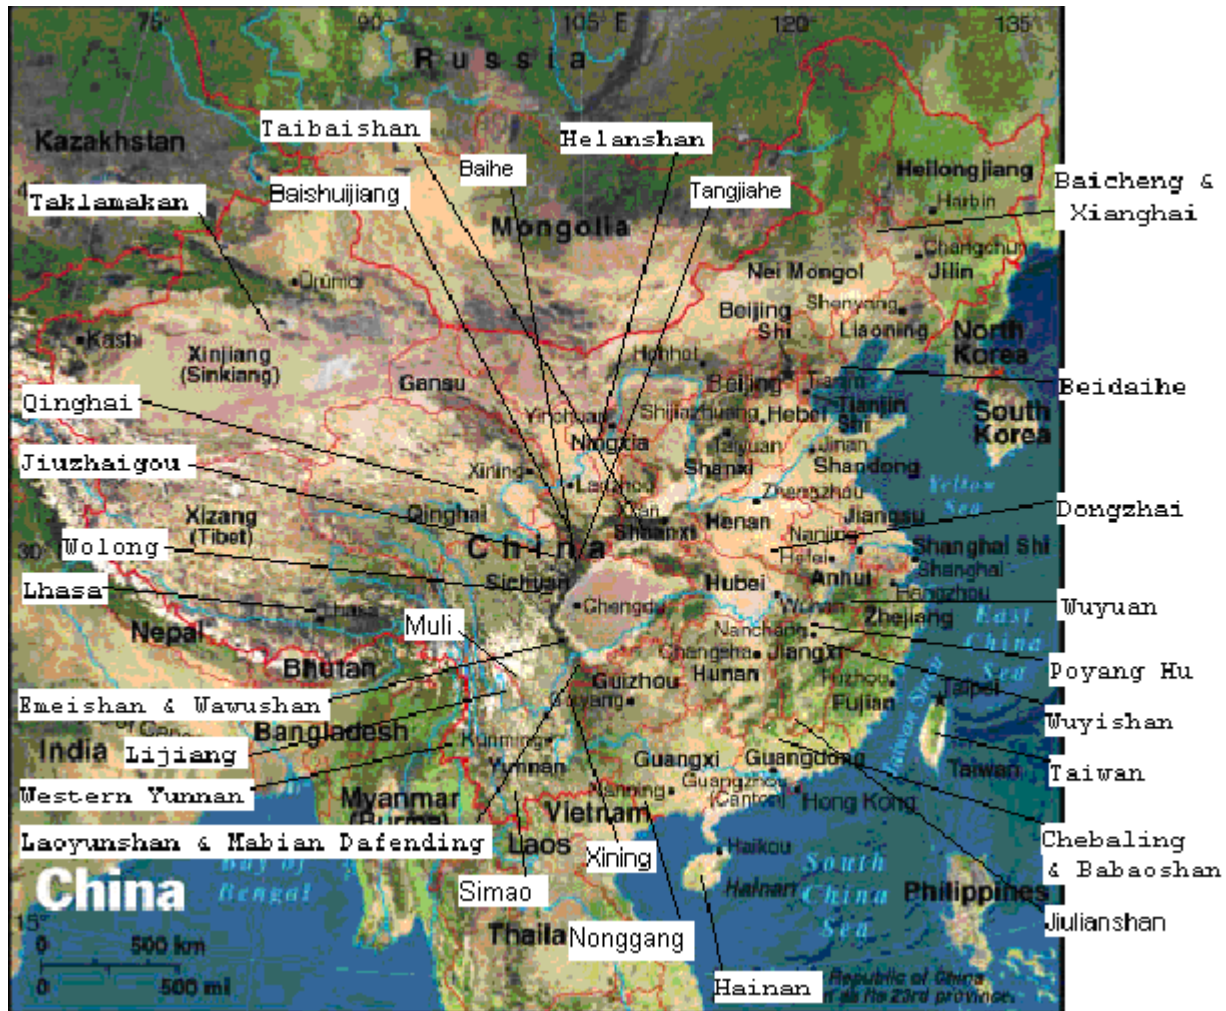

My thanks go also to all of you, who helped immensely in various ways in my search of birds, by answering endless of emails, sharing recordings, etc: Per Alstrom, Nick Athanas, Mikael Bauer, Geoff Carey, Ding Chang Qing, Simon Dowell, James Eaton, Paul Holt, Jon Hornbuckle, Mike Kilburn, Ben King, Dong Lei, Richard Lewthwaite, Chen Liang, Urban Olsson, Frank Rheindt, Liu Yang, Tim Woodward, Zhou Fang and many more.

Birdlist

The taxonomy and order principally follows Clements, although some changes have been made when I believe they could be justified. Species in bold are regarded as endemics and those marked in red are classified as threatened or near threatened by BirdLife International.

In order to give an overview of the Chinese avifauna, I have included all the species that are regarded as occurring in Greater China, although during 2003-2008 I have so far only recorded those with specific notes. Birds recorded in Beijing, will mostly just have the note "Beijing" unless specifically stated.
